I trained in interior design at KLC School of Design in London before completing a master's in contemporary art at Sotheby's Institute of Art in New York. The decade that followed took me through some of the art world's leading galleries, including David Zwirner and Gagosian in New York and London, and roles as Sales Director at Simon Lee Gallery and Galerie nächst St. Stephan in Vienna.

That work sharpened my eye for material, proportion and atmosphere: the qualities that make a room, or an object, feel right. Increasingly, it's interiors themselves that hold my attention. Fabric, texture, furniture, and the particular alchemy of a well-considered space.

The projects shown here are personal and independent, undertaken for myself and people close to me. They reflect an ongoing interest in how art, objects and interiors come together, and in creating spaces that feel collected rather than designed.

Open to opportunities in art advisory, interior curation, and design.

BROOKLYN, NEW YORK

DUMBO Loft

Art and sweeping views of the Hudson River set the tone for this DUMBO loft. A light, restrained palette and softer furnishings complement the collection while allowing the openness, natural light and views to remain at the heart of the space.

Vienna Loft

The iconic Mah Jong sofa became the starting point for the loft, bringing colour and softness to the open space. Art, vintage pieces and collected objects were layered around it, creating an interior that feels personal, eclectic and lived-in.

Gramercy Flat

An antique silk tapestry set the palette for the apartment—faded rose, warm neutrals and touches of green. The colours carry through the furnishings, while the greens echo the leafy canopy of Gramercy Park beyond, quietly connecting the interior to its setting.
